

No School

By Talia Robbins

We all thought no school would be great
Now being at home is something we hate
Distractions are plentiful
Nature is beautiful
It's easier to fall behind now
As you don't have your schedule to tie you down
To do that work that you missed
While you were missing school and starting to wish
That this pandemic would disappear
And it would be the start of the new school year.
Staying on task has been a bit of a struggle
Catching up is a lot of trouble
It feels like everything is in your way
To turn in your schoolwork for that day
Home responsibilities
Are basically killing me
Murphy's law is attacking
It may appear we are slacking
When in all honesty everything goes wrong every day
Nothing can go the right way.
Something pops up and there goes the focus
To get it back is a matter of hocus pocus
Your day goes bad?
Well, your internet went out so you can't turn in that assignment,
It makes me mad
Everyone thought no school would be great
Now being at home is something we hate.
